

Gender Equality and Human Rights

Overview

Gender equality is not only a basic human right, but its achievement has immense socio-economic consequences. Empowering women stimulates developing economies, triggering productivity and growth. Yet gender inequalities remain deeply rooted in every society. Women lack access to decent work and face occupational segregation and gender wage gaps. They are too often denied access to basic education and health care. Women in all parts of the world suffer violence and discrimination. They are under-represented in political and economic decision-making processes. Women are also under-represented, misrepresented and stereotyped in Media. Gender equality, focused on human rights, is both a development goal on its own and a crucial component for achieving sustainable development. It determines one of the governing principles of the 2030 Agenda for Development – the concept of 'leaving no one behind'. Over many decades, the United Nations has made significant progress in advancing gender equality, including through landmark agreements such as the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW). So it is very essential and need of the hour to sensitize the researchers, academicians, research scholars on gender equality and human rights. So this workshop aims at leaving no one behind in realizing gender equality and human rights.
